

An Inside Bath Makes You Look and Feel Fresh

Buy a glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast keeps illness away.
This excellent, common-sense health measure being adopted by millions.

Physicians the world over recommend the inside bath, claiming this is of vastly more importance than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood causing ill health, while the pores in the ten yards of bowels do.

Men and women are urged to drink each morning, before breakfast, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, as a harmless means of helping to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, poisons, sour bile and toxins, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Just as soap and hot water cleanse and freshen the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the eliminative organs.

Those who get up with a bad breath coated tongue, nasty taste or have a dull, aching head, sallow complexion, acid stomach; others who are subject to bilious attacks or constipation, should obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to demonstrate the value of inside bathing. Those who continue it each morning are assured of pronounced results, both in regard to health and appearance.—Adv.

Fog to Be Robbed of Its Terrors to Sailors Now

United Press Service
SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 17.—Wrecks and speeding on the bay in fog will be less a problem if a system which has come to the attention of United States Radio Inspector Wolverton is put into effect here.

The invention is that of F. A. Kolster of the bureau of standards at Washington, and is known as the "radio detector." It is an improvement on the various ship detectors thus far discovered, and gives exact location of ships as well as warning vessels of the approach of ships in a fog. It may be adapted for six uses. 1—On merchant vessels to obtain direction from any lighthouse or lightship equipped with radio for signaling. 2—To obtain direction of one ship from another at sea. 3—To communicate between ships and shore stations by reducing interference. 4—To communicate with military columns in field service. The receiving apparatus is portable, and requires no ground antennae. 5—It can be used by coast guard service in receiving distress signals in locating their direction.

JUDGE OUTLINES DIVORCE CAUSES

SAYS MISPLACED AMBITION, EROTIC LITERATURE AND MOVIE PLAY ON SEX PROBLEMS CAUSE SEPARATIONS

United Press Service
SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 18.—Misplaced ambition, erotic literature and sex motion pictures are three of the principal causes for divorce in this country, in the opinion of Superior Judge Thomas Graham, whose judicial position requires that he hear hundreds of divorce cases.

Judge Graham today cited the fact that there are now in the United States 176,156 divorced men and 195,201 divorced women.

"Misplaced ambition is one cause of this," he remarked. "The desire to overtake and live up to the style of others, is a partial answer to the insalubrious plan success. It also answers the question as to why there is little money to meet bills when they come in. It is one of our most prolific causes of divorce."

"Then there is our erotic literature and our sex motion pictures, which give men and women ideas on so-called sex problems. These aid materially in the formation of an idea that divorce is all right. Then the loose moral training in many homes is to be considered. Children grow up with a lax idea of their responsibilities."

"All of these things help to frame a false idea. The books, films, nearly everything we read or see reeks of this flow of wine and the gay life. There you find the eye and mind fastened day after day."

"The tearing down of these false ideals and the substitution of the real facts of life has been suggested as a possible remedy for this condition of affairs. Confront each man with the actual facts regarding his salary and expenses and exactly where 'he gets off,' and the woman with these same expenses and the real problems of life, and I believe we will go a long way towards helping to cure the social ills that now lead to the divorce court."

A Champion at 53

Walter J. Travis

Walter J. Travis, aged 53, showed a crowd of young golfers what he could do at his age when he won the Metropolitan championship on Long Island against a field of men of national renown in the game.

Travis right now weighs nearly 140 pounds, and is about 5 feet eight inches in height. He wears glasses because the strain of watching golf balls during many years has slightly impaired his sight. His costume on the links—Norfolk jacket and knickerbockers—is the traditional uniform. It is very popular with many of the older golfers. A big black cigar completes the figure of Travis that is so familiar in all tournaments.

A peep into the Travis golf bag gives a good insight into the man's deep study of his favorite sport. His clubs are the weirdest collection you ever saw, drivers with big knots on them, mashes shaped like fish hooks and puttees exceptional for their bulk. But they all serve their purpose.

For his weight and age Travis drives a remarkably long ball off the tee, the reward of perfect swinging and correct timing. Like Harry Vardon, the celebrated English champion, Travis will always sacrifice distance for direction, not only because it is the proper thing to do, but advancing years have taken some power from his arms and shoulders.

GERMANY AGREES TO IT IF

TEUTONIC NATION ASKS PLEDGE FROM ENGLAND THAT MERCHANTMEN WILL NOT ATTACK DIVERS

United Press Service
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 18.—England must give a pledge that her liners will not fire on German submarines before Germany will instruct her divers not to attack armed merchantmen without first giving warning. This is Germany's counter proposal to America's objection to the recent German decree.

Secretary of State Lansing and Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, held an informal conference regarding the matter late yesterday.

It is learned authoritatively that Germany and America are in complete accord on the Lusitania question, except that the United States considers the settlement must be as to care for the future as well as the past.

It is understood that Lansing insisted that the acclaimed American policy regarding merchantmen carrying arms for defensive purposes must be carried out.

Conscription Situation Not So Bad in England as We Think

Once Convinced That Compulsory Service Is Essential to Military Success, Opponents Accept Inevitable

By ED L. KEEN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—It would be the greatest possible mistake for any one to assume that the recent wrangle in England over the question of conscription indicated a lack of interest on the part of the anti-conscriptionists in the successful prosecution of the war.

The whole row might readily have been prevented had the government seen fit to take the British people into its confidence and show them in detail just why a modified form of conscription was necessary. But there were military reasons, so it was said, why such a course was inadvisable.

Rather than impart any possible useful information to the enemy, the British administration actually prepared to run the risk of itself being overturned.

So there was an awful squabble, and for a time it seemed as if the government would surely collapse. The anti-conscriptionists finally yielded, but without surrendering their principles.

Having once become convinced that some degree of compulsory military service was necessary in order to win the war, they promptly put their principles on the shelf.

Wherefore there is presented the amazing spectacle of what is now a conscriptionist cabinet containing among its ablest and most conscientious members three men who had always been fundamentally opposed to conscription in any form.

Organized labor, although as a matter of principle still arguing against conscription, has accepted the inevitable. But more than that, the leaders have entered into a solemn compact with Premier Asquith whereby the ordinary trade union regulations have been thrown overboard for the period of the war, so that women and unskilled laborers may perform certain tasks hitherto allotted only to skilled workmen, thus releasing the latter for the more difficult and technical jobs in the munitions industry.

There will be no anti-conscription riots in England. It is one of the Britisher's peculiar traits that he does his revolting before an unpopular law goes on the statute books. Thereafter he always submits, although sometimes with a wry face.

It was so in that case of Lloyd George's national insurance scheme, and more recently when under the defense of the realm act public drinking hours were cut from 18 to 5 1/2 a day, and treating was prohibited.

True, the bill as finally passed provided for only a sort of sugar-coated conscription. A lot of exemptions and exceptions were arranged, so that the law will actually bring into the army only about half a million additional men; but the big outstanding fact is that the anti-conscriptionists temporarily sacrificed one ideal for the sake of one they believed to be a greater victory for the allies. It is the finest demonstration yet afforded of the present fighting spirit of England.

United Press Service

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Maybe you have wondered where all the Turkish tobacco in our numberless brands of Turkish cigarettes is coming from since the war closed the Turkish ports. Vice President W. H. O'Brien of the American Tobacco company, in answer to an inquiry, told all about it today, saying in part:

"The smokers of genuine Turkish cigarettes—I mean cigarettes made by the larger manufacturers and in which nothing is used but pure Turkish tobacco—need fear no adulteration of their favorites until 1918, at least, because a three years' supply of Turkish tobacco is kept constantly on hand in the curing process. It is only in the last few months that the normal importation of Turkish tobacco has decreased and we hope and believe that before we begin to suffer a real shortage we will be able to replenish our stocks from growers who have cured the tobacco in Turkey under the direction of our experts, so it can be used immediately as soon as we get it over here.

"Contrary to the general belief, the war has not entirely cut off Turkish tobacco importations. It is true that the twenty to twenty-five million pounds annually imported to the United States from Turkey has dropped in the last year to a little over one million pounds and there seems no immediate prospect of getting more soon, but a little is coming in all the time through the ports of Greece.

"We hope this shortage will not mean a rise in the prices of pure Turkish cigarettes and personally, at this time, I do not believe it will mean an increased price, but no one knows what the situation will be later. The tobacco man hardest hit by the shortage is the little manufacturer who buys in small lots from the bigger fellows from time to time. Their supply was cut off very soon after the war began and, as they cannot afford to pay the price of what little Turkish tobacco is imported, they have either to boost their prices, substitute a cheap domestic tobacco, or go out of business. Many of them have failed and are failing every day just for this reason. Some of them are using cheaper tobaccos.

"There is nothing in the appearance of cigarette tobacco that would show the layman that even twenty per cent of his so-called pure Turkish cigarette was a domestic substitute, but a regular smoker of Turkish cigarettes could tell at the first whiff if, even so much as two per cent of his cigarette is domestic leaf."
